Acknowledgments

Frank Capra's movies followed his belief in "one man, one film." This book took many people to bring it to life. We thank them here:

Tom Brown, for his steady and intelligent assistance

Paul Bartosik, for designing our database application on Paradox software

Michael Dagley, for computer consultation

Greg Galloway, Alice Barmore, Iris Dorbian, and Doreen Russo, for accurate typing

The librarians at the Lincoln Center Library for the Performing Arts, for rolling out carts of movie casts for our perusal

Robert Ditillio, for the Ditillio Collection

Deborah Brody, for her early suggestions on the book

Gary Krebs, for not collapsing at the sight of the manuscript

Paul Fargis, for his support throughout the project.

We could not have completed Cast without you.

Introduction

A Cast of Thousands is a book of nearly 10,000 movie casts (with comprehensive indexes of actors and directors) spanning 80 years, from Queen Elizabeth in 1912 to The Silence of the Lambs in 1991. Over a decade's worth of movies had been made before our earliest listing; many movies have followed Silence; many that were made between '12 and '91 do not appear in this book. More than anything, A Cast of Thousands is a book about choices.

How did we choose the 10,000 movies in the book? Most of the reasons are straightforward. We included all of the movies that have received Academy Awards in major categories. We tried to include every movie generally deemed "classic." We included non-classic movies that distinguished themselves in other ways: big moneymakers; cult favorites; critical, if not financial, successes; the work of a famous director. We included samplings of standard movie genres—westerns, mysteries, love stories, comedies, science fiction. Finally, though we concentrated on American sound films, we also included a selection of silent and foreign films.

Beyond that, we concentrated on the main point of the book: to celebrate the actors who dramatize the stories on the screen. For a few major stars, like James Stewart and Katharine Hepburn, we included every movie in their filmography. For others, like William Powell and Myrna Loy, we chose a representative sampling.

But we did not stop at stars. Probably our most satisfying work came in creating a medley of character actors, supporting players, and plain old familiar faces. Once we stepped beyond the five or six principal cast members, we found a world of actors who made their livelihoods working in volume over decades, or by working steadily for a few years, then never again. For example, there are Eugene Pallette and Eric Blore, who brought comic relief to already outrageous screwball comedies. There is Lionel Stander, who played wiseacre sidekicks until his career virtually ended with the 1950s blacklist. There was Beulah Bondi, who was everyone's mother at MGM. There was Regis Toomey, the Irish presence in every film made in the Studio Era, and Harry Dean Stanton, supporting actor in every movie made in the 1980s needing a world-weary countenance.

In addition to trying to present a wide range of movie actors, we charted the movie dynasties, the famous families as well as the hidden. Not only did we include the works of the Fondas, the Fairbanks, and the Barrymores, we sought out the movies of acting families never celebrated in tell-all biographies, like western star Yakima Canutt and his son Joe, Pedro Armendariz and his son Pedro, Jr., and silent star Francis X. Bushman and his son Francis X., Jr. (aka Ralph).

Despite the mammoth number of actors mentioned in the book (about 40,000 are listed in the Actor Index), very few of the movies in A Cast of Thousands can boast 100% complete cast listings. Many movies that appear to have few speaking roles in fact have long casts that trail down to the busboy who rolls his eyes and the doorman who says, "I haven't seen her, sir." To keep the book a manageable size, we limited most casts to about 15 players. For epics, costume dramas and musicals, casts are often longer—some with as many as 40 or 50 actors. Won Ton Ton, the Dog Who Saved Hollywood (1976), has 71 cast members, including Bruce Dern, Huntz Hall, Keye Luke, Ann Miller, and Augustus Von Schumacher as the title character.

In addition to charting careers, A Cast of Thousands also provides dabblers in cultural history an unofficial history of first names. The days of silent films were ruled by actors and characters named Alfred, Frederick, Mary, and May. The studio era saw plenty of Veda, Constance, Bill, and Joe. Modern movies are represented by Michael, Josh, Michelle, and Jessica. Male names prefaced by the words "Laredo" and "Deadwood" end with the heyday of the western. "Slim" is one of the few western names that crossed over to other genres, probably because it could be easily applied to a character of either sex (think of Lauren Bacall in To Have and Have Not). Child actors have acquired stature over the years, dropping the once requisite "Baby" from their names. These days, "Baby Leroy" and "Baby Dumpling" would be, respectively, Leroy and Dumpling. Perhaps the only constant is in the names of animal stars. They remain the most colorful—Tony the Wonder Horse and Nissa the Leopard from film's early days, and Jerry Lee the Dog and Clyde the Orangutan from today.

The hidden gift of a reference book is the companionship that its information can bring. The name "Margaret Hamilton" recalls a familiar voice and the first time you saw The Wizard of Oz. The Actor Index, listing 140 titles under "Wayne, John," confirms that they really did make more movies in the old days. The cast for The Rescuers settles once and for all that it was Eva, not Zsa Zsa, who provided the voice for Miss Bianca. Although this book was always a labor and only sometimes a labor of love, it yields us in its completion such companionship. A Cast of Thousands makes us want to watch more movies.

—Melinda Corey and George Ochoa

A Note to the Reader

We have tried to make A Cast of Thousands as complete and easy to use as possible. Part I, "The Casts," is organized alphabetically by title; movies with the same title are sorted by year. The year listed for the movie is the year of its release. The studio is the releasing studio. Production companies, if different from the releasing studios, are usually not listed. For foreign films, the producing countries are listed in parentheses. Foreign films are usually dated by their release in their native country, not their release in the United States. All directors are named, including multiple and uncredited ones. Multiple titles are also listed and cross-referenced. (As a rule, the worse the movie, the more titles it has. For example, the Gamera the Monster series routinely had three or four titles, in both English and Japanese.)

Movie titles are generally alphabetized word by word. Act One comes before Action, followed by Action in Arabia. Punctuation marks inside a word (periods, hyphens, apostrophes) are treated as if they are breaks between words. Thus D.C. Cab and D.O.A. come before Da, and A-Haunting We Will Go before Abandon Ship!

Asterisks are used in Part I to indicate Academy Award winners. One asterisk (*) next to a movie title, director, or actor's name signifies Best Picture, Best Director, or Best Actor or Actress. Two asterisks () signifies Best Foreign Film or Best Supporting Actor or Actress.

Part II, "Index of Directors," lists alphabetically every director who appears in Part I. Each director's list of films is sorted by year, and within a year by title.

Part III, "Index of Actors," lists alphabetically every actor who appears in Part I. Each actor's list of films is sorted by year, and within a year by title. We tried as often as possible to group each actor's films under one name, with cross-references when the actor used two or more very different last names (e.g., Rita Hayworth and Cansino). But some actors appear under more than one first name (for example, Jimmy and James), and occasionally one name may conceal two different actors. We tried to address the latter problem by using Roman numerals to distinguish actors like the silent film Harrison Ford (I) and his latter-day counterpart (II).

The peculiarities of modern databases have not left our book unaffected. In the indexes, names with "Jr." or "Sr." sort as if the "Jr." or "Sr." were the first name. Thus "Smith, Jr., Robert" would be found after "Smith, Ivan" but before "Smith, Karen."

Finally, although we have consulted many sources and tried to maintain consistency, mistakes are inevitable. Please send any corrections for A Cast of Thousands to:
